So as to prostatitis treatment, male patients go to see the doctor, and want to get prostatitis pain relief, then probably be told that they need an antibiotic for the infection that is assumed to be causing his discomfort. But in most cases, that diagnosis would be wrong. Many patients probably don't have infections, and antibiotics won't make a bit of difference.

Only 5% to 10% of men with prostate-related symptoms have bacterial infections. Most patients with prostatitis pain are caused by chronic nonbacterial prostatitis/chronic pelvic pain syndrome (CP/CPPS), which is a complicated condition that typically bringing pain in the perineum (the area between the testicles and the anus) and/or in the penis, testicles and pelvic area.

Prostatitis is the most common disease among 20-50 year old men, which includes bacterial prostatitis, nonbacterial prostatitis, and chronic pelvic pain syndrome. When inflammation and infection invaded prostate, the recurrent inflamed tissues will obstruct the prostate gland, then become swollen and cause prostatitis pain in male. For the early symptoms of prostatitis, antibiotics may present with good effects in a short time. But for patients with chronic prostatitis or with serious symptoms, they probably feel ineffective towards antibiotics. Compared to antibiotics provide a decreasing curative effect due to drug resistance or tolerance, herbal medicine is provided with stable quality and long-term effects, which can cure disease radically with good prognosis.
Except that, some antibiotics also cause other side effects on male patients, as erythromycin are toxic to the testicles and sometimes cause permanent damage for cells that produce sperm. Then, some medications also decrease male sexual interest in intercourse, or libido. Apart from that, some medications even interfere with the ability of a man to get an erection or ejaculate. Manufactured in a lab using synthetic chemicals, some drugs that are available for use have a long list of possible side effects attributed to them. "It might be that they have tried Western medicine and it hasn't worked, or it might be that they want to try natural medicine first or even in conjunction with Western medicine," says Shannon, the president of the Australian Complementary Medicine Association.
